THOUGH IT RAIN

W. H. Lord
Do you like the sunshine,
Pleasant all the while?
Do you like a clear blue sky,
Making life worthwhile?
Do you like the greenwood,
In some shady nook,
Or the lofty mountains,
Nestled by the brook?
If you take a pleasure,
And your lot is gain,
You must not murmur hardships,
Though it ever rain.
When the day is over,
And your daily work
Seems to bear no comfort,
As your troubles lurk,
You may then acknowledge,
That your lot was gain,
For you kept on working,
While it seemed to rain.
Still you took no pleasure,
Working hard by hours,
For the day seemed dreary,
By some cloudy shower.
Yet you worked so diligent,
That people seemed to say,
"A man will be no shirker,
Who follows his way."
Thus you make your fortune,
Contentedly and plain,
For you held an interest
Through the day of rain.
And men seem to follow,
Day by day to gain,
But find the true and faithful,
Keep going, though it rain.

"GONE"?

By Winnie Gray Curtis
"They tell me you're gone—
I suppose it's so—
But remember, I did not see you go,
They tell me the ocean is your fate,
That you're deep down, under the water, dead,
Somewhere you always seem so near,
I seem to hear you calling me so near,
Remember I have your step on the stair,
And see you there in your favorite chair,
And see your fishing lure with line and reel,
And the wooly coat that I love to feel,
With the sleeves still bent where your arms
Have been.
It seems that you must be back again,
Your raincoat is now all packed and dry,
I remember, I did not see you die,
At meals, I always seem to see
Your loving eyes smile back at me.
At night, when I go to rest,
No matter how lonely, I love it best,
I imagine you there, and seem to feel
Your arms about me sweetly steal.
And when the sunlight's here again,
I pretend there's a dew where your head has lain.
Although they tell me that you are dead,
You always seem here with me instead,
Each day finds me with a smile,
And I pretend you're out for a little while.

Oxford County United Parish

Embracing Albany, North Lovell, East Stoneham and the Waterfalls. Pastoral Staff: Revs. W. L. Bull, B. F. Wentworth, A. C. Townsend.

Last Sunday all the morning services in the Parish were merged in one All-the-Parish service at Albany. The "Thirteen Class," a men's class in St. Lawrence Church, Portland, had charge of the service. Some twenty-five men came from Portland with their teacher, Henry Merrill and with an orchestra. Chairs and settees were brought out from the church and Grange hall to the lawn between the two buildings where a large gathering from all the communities of the United Parish were seated to listen to selections by the orchestra and to sing familiar hymns with the leading of the orchestra. Mr. Merrill delivered a very interesting address on the subject of "Thankfulness," making it an interpretation of the 103rd psalm.

The day was ideal for such a gathering, the sky being overcast but without rain. After the service, many who had brought their lunches picnicked in groups to whom the Albany ladies served coffee. Some of the groups became family reunions, notably the Cummings' kindred, who ate together under the near-by trees set by their ancestors.

Next Sunday the Parish will be visited by Rev. Cyril Hughes, District Superintendent of the Portland District of the Methodist Church. He will visit the St. Lawrence Church in the morning and the Sunday-school will hold its annual Children's Day. Mr. Hughes will speak briefly to the children. He will then attend the service at North Waterford at 11 a. m., where he will preach.

The Sunday-schools of the Parish will take a recess during July and August, during which time daily Church Vacation Schools will be held at two points in the Parish. The first school will open at East Stoneham, Tuesday, July 2nd. Miss Maude Stewart of Auburn, Me., will have charge of the Primary work. The second school will begin later at Waterford or South Waterford. Miss Sadie Rowe of Fishburne will also assist in the schools. Transportation will be provided where needed. It is hoped that all the children of the parish will attend one of the other of these schools. The moving picture for the week of July 1-7 will be "Spoilers of the West" with Tim McCoy. On Thursday evening this picture will be shown in the Saxo Valley United Parish, which will make necessary the omission of one showing in the home parish. This will be done as a neighborly courtesy to the sister parish.

Revs. Bull and Wentworth are attending the Conference of Rural Church Workers at Ocean Park this week.

Ted and Dave on Red Star Ranch

By Irene Connor, Bethel, Route 3, in 7th Grade, Age 13 Years

Ted and Dave Dawson lived on a ranch in the west. They were strong, well built, rough and tumble boys, and always fond of riding horseback. Often they accompanied the roughest crowd of cowboys to be found anywhere on their long ride.

There were always cowboys herding over the cattle, to keep them from straying and from any other danger. Sometimes they were obliged to leave the cattle alone to graze, and perhaps when they returned there would be twenty or more of the best ones gone. Perhaps not quite as many, but there was certainly enough taken.

Of course this trouble was caused by the outlaws. Ted and Dave hated them and often wished that they could get even.

One day when the boys were out in the corral, saddling their ponies to go for a ride, Bill Dewey came galloping up from one of the grazing grounds, he told the boys' father, Mr. Dawson, that the outlaws had taken ten of the best steers.

Mr. Dawson was used to hearing such news and began getting all the cowboys that were left around the place. Jesse Blaine had gone and sleep on his back, and as Mr. Dawson passed by, he gave Jesse a dig in the ribs that made him sit up and take notice. "Hurry up, Jesse, and saddle your old bronco, those outlaws have taken ten of our best steers."

"Where were they grazing?" blurted out Jesse. "At Cole Brook," answered Mr. Dawson. "After a party, Jesse, jumped out of the bunk, grabbed his sombrero and bounded out of the open door.

As Jesse rushed into the corral, Dave put the question, "What's the matter, Jesse, old top?" "Oh, then, blame outlaws have taken ten of the best steers," Jesse mumbled.

"Hurry up, Jesse," ejaculated Dave. When Dave returned from talking to Jesse, Ted was not there. Dave thought that Ted had gone out of the corral. He hustled out and found Ted and Mr. Dawson in the kitchen. Mr. Dawson had refused to let the boys go out the door and into the corral, but as Dave came bustling through the door, he knew that Dave would be teasing too, so he said, "All right my boys, but hurry." At these words Dave whistled and passed through the door and ran toward the corral. Shortly after, Ted came, followed by his father. In about five minutes they could be seen galloping from the ranch like the wind.

That evening as the rays of the moon lit up the eastern horizon a party of weary cowboys, also Mr. Dawson and his two sons could be seen urging their tired horses on. About ten o'clock that night they made camp. They took the saddles from the broncos' backs, rolled up in their blankets and within five minutes were fast asleep.

It was long after the sun rose next morning when the little party opened their eyes. They cooked their breakfast and in a short time were on the trail again. As they were riding along they could see very plainly in the sand the tracks of many cattle and horses. "Hurrah!" shouted Dave, "we're on the right trail!"

As they neared a large forest they thought they could hear very indistinct voices. The place did not look any different from any other place, but still there was something about it that seemed conspicuous. "I'm going to have a look around here," said Ted and Dave. A few minutes later the bushes parted and out stepped Dave. "He ordered," he ordered, "We've found both outlaws and cattle." Noisily they crept to the entrance of the cave, as it was a cave, that Dave had come upon, and it concealed the outlaws.

The outlaws were half stunned as a stern voice ordered, "Hands up, all of you bunch!" Instantly they obeyed, all but one. He disappeared down a hole in the side of the cave. They bound and gagged every outlaw and strapped them on the backs of their ponies. Some of them made a terrible noise, but they had to surrender. When they returned to the ranch there were cheers everywhere for them.

After that excitement was over the place grew quiet all again. One day Dave said to Ted, "We ought to do something helpful around here, now. We've lived here all our life and it's about time there should be something to show for it."

Well it was long before they had their chance. One day when some extra cowboys were needed to herd over the cattle from the place of the cowboys. About ten o'clock that morning they were hungry, and as the grazing grounds were not very far from the ranch they started out. When they got back they noticed about fifteen cattle. "Well, here, now, what do you think of that?" ejaculated Ted. "Hey! you ride back to the place, and if no one is there leave a note, saying that we've gone on home after those outlaws. Say not to worry, now hurry." Soon he was back. They followed the trail all the way. The place where the outlaws were hiding was in the mountains. There was a natural gateway through the mountains and in the side of it was cut a cave. The outlaws were of course half stunned when they heard a boyish voice demand, "hands up, you rascals." Luckily there were only four of the outlaws this time. They would have fought if it had not been for quick witted Dave. He told them that they might as well give up as they had more men outside than could get in that cave. When the boys and the stolen possessions were returned to the ranch, the words of their father ran as thus: "My boys you have done a brave deed, and we present you with medals for your bravery."

As these words passed from the lips of Mr. Dawson the boys hearts yearned no more for adventures for a while. The headlines in the paper that they got next day read as follows: Four outlaws captured by the Dawson brothers, Ted and Dave. They received honors from everywhere, for later it was found that the four men were the leaders of the gang of outlaws, who had sadly ruined the number of cattle on many ranches besides Mr. Dawson's, and the hardest part of it was that they did not get them back. That night when the Dawson brothers went to bed, Dave said, "I've a hunch that we're going to have some more adventures and more thrilling ones than these, although the ones that we've just had were thrilling enough for just now."

RECALLING OLD MEMORIES

The following poem, a copy of which was brought to us by Mrs. Sara Fickett, was written many years ago, and was published in the Advertiser probably twenty-five years ago. Only two of those mentioned, besides the author are still living. Those two are "Bessie" and "Hul" and the incident which occasioned the poem took place over sixty years ago.

Days of "Lang Syne"
How often, when worn with the city's confusion
Its slumberous care and its clamorous din,
When we've turned to our home and its blessed
Its quiet and rest and the love-light within.

Our minds will revert to the charmed scenes
Of childhood,
The river, the fields and the paternal cot;
And from the day's ranging through pasture
The herd coming home, led by Brindle and Spot.

But how will memory quail at a fountain
That murmurs of grandeur and tender delight,
As together we charge on our lofty mountain
And gain its bold summit, to revel in sight.

And again its bold summit, to revel in sight,
Were Mary and Sarah and Nellie and Julie,
And Lewis and Edna as ever climbed mountain passes.

And Lizzie, the silent, and Bessie and Hul—
Led by Albert and Lewis and Judson and Fred,
And Gravelle and Herbert and comical Kim,
And Sewell, with the frolic rain in merriest hum.

And your humble servant, not far behind him,
Our mission, perchance, was to call the blueberries
That grew in abundance on this rugged mountain.

But we found we had climbed up a pine tree
For cherries,
And the shortage we charged to old brain's weakness.

But patience is always rewarded by treasure,
Or something worth treasuring, equally
Or more so.
And, failing in spirit, we went in for pleasure,
With undimmed spirits and unclouded eyes.

"Oh, here, on the summit of Mount Asclepius," Quoth one of the leaders, pro tem, of the club.
"Well, build us some wigwags of rough bark and moss,
And let each view the sun rise abroad o'er
the land."

Then, presto, arose, in a rock-sheltered place,
The primitive camps with apartments complete.
And some spread with rugs the whole inner space.

While others were "gone to the town to buy meat."
Thus, apart, yet so near, one fire in the center,
As night shadows fell on the mountain's side.

Would guard against the brain's possible ventures.
And the measure of mirth in our bold pastime fell.

"Oh, the delight of that long autumn evening,
When the campfires, with youth, beauty and song,
While the night's shroud o'er the distant fells lay veiling.

Completed a scene that to dreams might be long.
Down, when again from our wigwags we sally.

The scene that awaits us no pen can portray.
The mist has departed like river and valleys.
And the "round" the mountains, away and away.

To the east, bold Katahdin guards fair Kineo;
North, near the Dominion, Mount Magallowe;
Peak, summit and crest rise circling windows.
From the gray, rolling ocean to blend with the sky.

And yet, while we gaze with delight beyond
the sea,
On the grand panorama, spread out at our feet.
The sun bursts the hues o'er the eastern hills swelling.

And makes this rare vision of Nature complete.
As its radiance falls on the mist's pearly ocean.
After in the east a bright light is seen,
Spreading and rolling with swift, ceaseless motion.

Transfiguring summits and valleys between,
Again the scene changes from vision to reality.
Departure from transient abiding, serial,
To seek for green moss-banks by babbling brooks.

In rapid descent from a region celestial
To the every-day trails of profit and loss,
To wane memory's colors o'er humdrum ter-restial.

On an evening and morn on Mount Asclepius,
Edwin H. Wilson.

The "Bessie" spoken of in the poem was Bessie Jane Fickett and in 1874 married John Olson, a native of Norway in Europe and lived eight years in Magallowe way P. L., Maine, then moved to Wilson's Mills, Maine, onto the farm once owned and cleared up by her father, Leonard Fickett and where she was born. Her husband, until within a year or two of his death, was a popular guide at Farmacheenee Lake. Her son, Lewis, now tells the family the story of her life.

PICKEREL FISHING

To the ordinary person who takes a few hours off for the purpose of procuring some fish for the family there are three disappointments. The first is when he has no bites. The second is the fish he loses—generally the biggest one and third when he gets the hook tangled in the water and has to pull it out. In his irritation and frustration he jerks to free the hook and line, he breaks the end of his pole or loses his hook and part of the line and so prevents any chance for any further fishing. In perhaps the best locality that he is likely to find.

These statements apply to pickerel fishing in all kinds of the sport for the winter.

On the other hand if successful, the delights are many. To start with, one must have a right pole, a strong line, a sharp hook, a good bait and one who is skillful in managing the boat. Having all these, I determined one cloudy day this week to try my luck on the upper waters of Norway's lake.

Before starting out from our cottage, while affixing the hook and line to a new pole Bob had purchased at Leavitt's store, Jay saw a good sized pickerel near the shore and an effort was made to induce him to bite the hook baited with an anglerworm, but all to no purpose. The fish to my disappointment by that time had business done and the lake had all confidence that the "old man" wouldn't be "skunked" as we had never within memory gone out fishing without getting something to show for the effort, but I didn't share in that confidence.

There was a feeling that luck had somehow slipped away with the gamey fellow headed for Sandy Shore. I allowed the bait to trail along behind the boat, headed for the upper waters of the pond, but nothing came of it. Noticing a little cloud with some grass growing out of the water, he suggested that I should make a cast there. It was rather difficult to do it skillfully to avoid the hook getting attached to some branches of a tree that hung over the water. It was done, however, and we were ready with our first fish—a small one. I tried a second cast and the hook caught on some sunken deadwood. I found that Leavitt's hook took hold of everything and touched, and by actual contact before I got tired of fishing. Bob had to extricate the hook from where it got caught, seven-teen times.

As we moved into the fishing grounds in making a cast, I felt a bite and having to pull quickly to prevent the fish from going into some driftwood it came off the hook, but fortunately Bob headed the boat. This was great luck. As Melzar Buck of Buckfield once determined the weight of his pigs by the judgement of himself and wife to be a certain number of pounds and some ounces, the fish weighed a quarter of a pound and two ounces. I don't expect anyone to take this as gospel truth. No attempt was made to determine in this manner the weight or size of any of the other five caught that day, but they were all larger.

Anglerworms seem to be scarce in some localities this year and little frogs are not plenty, anyhow our supply of worms gave out at the fourth fish and a fin was cut out of the smallest one and with this for bait three pickerel more were snaked into the boat, making seven in all.

By this time it was getting along towards noon and unlike the great fishermen of the Allagash and other Maine waters, we were not willing to catch fish to take back into the pond and having secured enough for two good meals for us we knocked off and rowed back to the cottage. My anglerworms had been so quickened by seeing the pickerel dart for the bait, that having some fatigue from shaking the pole I actually felt for a time, that I was young again. C. F. Whitman.

SCHOOL COSTS AND INCOME IN MAINE

The great mass of Maine's citizens want good schools. They want every child in the state to have an equal chance with the other children of the nation. Good schools and a fair chance for every child are inseparable. But some say we cannot afford good schools. Is this true?

Consider the situation of a man, the head of a family, whom we have in mind. He owns real estate and other property valued at $24,000. Through investments of various kinds he is steadily increasing his capital. Besides investments he keeps $3,000 on deposit in his savings account. He has a comfortable yearly income of $5,600. Now, how much can a man in this situation afford for the education of his children? What can he afford to pay about two percent of his income be within his ability to pay?

Answer these questions as you will. The fact is that the man described above is really the State of Maine. The figures given will become approximately those for Maine if you will add five zeros to each of them. The people of Maine own property valued at about $2,400,000. They have over $300,000,000 deposited in savings accounts and an annual total income of about $56,000,000. And they spend $120,000,000 a year for public schools of all types.

Of course, all heads of families in Maine do not own $24,000 worth of property or enjoy an annual income of $5,600. But, then, neither do most heads of families pay $120 a year for schools. A man not so well off as the one described above pays proportionately less for schools. Assume any kind of man you wish—rich, poor, or average. Study the state estimates given above and draw your own conclusions. Then answer the question raised in the first paragraph. Can Maine afford good schools for Maine's children?

Ancient Maple Going Strong

VENERABLE MAPLE TREE IN NORWAY IS STILL YIELDING SAP AFTER A CENTURY'S TAPPING

From "Facts About Sugar," a weekly trade journal. Used by permission of the publishers.

"A sugar maple tree which has been tapped annually for at least a century past, according to family tradition, and certainly for years beyond the recollection of any one now living, is still yielding its regular quota of sap on the farm of Levi Richardson, near this place. The farm has been in the Richardson family for four generations, ever since it was reclaimed from the wilderness about one hundred years ago, and members of the present generation say that it has been tapped every spring from their grand-father's time. Old auger holes and faint scars, partly obliterated by time and weather, on the trunk of the tree, lend support to this statement.

"A recent visit to the Richardson place showed the ancient giant of the forest as it appears in the accompanying picture, with five sap buckets suspended from its trunk. Two more, not visible in the photograph, hung on the other side of the tree, making a total of seven. It is said that at times it has given enough sap to supply ten buckets at once.

"With a diameter of about five feet, the old tree towers above the other maples in the Richardson 'sugar land,' of which there are about 300. It is believed to be a survivor of the original forest growth, one of the few hereabouts that have escaped the axe. Its girth and height in comparison with smaller sized maples recently cut which showed 98 annual growth rings have caused its age to be estimated as probably 200 years.

"As the number of buckets supported on it indicates, the old tree still gives a good yield of sap, which is also of unusually good quality and rich in sugar. It is Mr. Richardson's practice to plug the auger holes in the trunk after each season's 'run' of sap.

"Local inhabitants are inclined to back the Richardson tree for the sugar maple championship for length and amount of productivity. Whether or not this opinion is well founded, certainly there is no other like it in this part of the country.

WHERE THE CHANGE BEGINS

Before you begin to clamor for a better civilization, why don't you civilize yourself? Why don't you cultivate better manners? Why don't you try to improve your mind? Why don't you work harder? Why don't you smile more and complain less? Why don't you become more gentle toward your neighbors and fellow citizens? Why don't you realize that a better civilization will have to start in you?

Please quit passing the buck about the sins of the world. Wash your own neck—that will be a start toward making the world better and promoting civilization. The world is you. What you are, the world is, as far as you are concerned.

Once a man went to his home and found his wife and five children gone. They remained away a month. And everybody laughed at that poor man. Later he disappeared and was gone a week, and was arrested for family desertion. Men and rosters always get the worst of it.

Public Men I Have Known

Article No. 17, by C. F. Whitman

John A. Hayden, Stenographer—Judge Thomas H. Haskell

John A. Hayden became a court stenographer for Judge Thomas H. Haskell in the early eighties of the last century. He was serving under Judge Wm. R. Pattangall when he passed away. The judge died in May last. He was a member of the corps of stenographers who have been in continuous service for nearly half a century. John A. Hayden was one of the most likeable of men—a warm hearted, quick full of dry humor and a true and affectionate friend. His fund of anecdotes of incidents in court, of judges and court officials, was inexhaustible.

My first acquaintance with him was during the October term of the court in 1904 on Paris Hill. It was the beginning of a close and lasting friendship. Judge Haskell was the presiding justice of the court. The writer had been elected clerk of the courts the month before, and was anxious to find out what the decision of the full court—which had not been announced—was in regard to the removal of the county seat from Paris Hill to South Paris. Later, after I had known Judge Haskell for some time, he had hesitated to have asked him to give me a tip about it, but he finally did so.

Just before the removal of the county seat from Paris Hill to South Paris, I was in the court house when the decision was made. I was in the court house when the decision was made. I was in the court house when the decision was made.

You Get Dependability on the Belt Jobs, Too!

John Deere Farm Tractor

Now is the time when you want a dependable and economical tractor for your belt works.

Threshing, baling, grinding feed, shelling, filling silo, sawing wood, shredding — these are some of the important jobs that you'll do more economically with the John Deere.

With a John Deere on the power end of the belt you are assured of ample, smooth-running power to handle them all. No matter how sudden or how heavy the demand thrown upon it, the sensitive governor responds instantly to the power load.

There's no loss of power between the engine and the belt on the John Deere. Belt pulley is mounted on the crankshaft, where it delivers every available ounce of engine power to the belt. Belt pulley is on the right side of the tractor in plain view of the operator running in the right direction for a crossed belt.

Of simple, sturdy construction — with fewer wearing parts — the John Deere Tractor stands supreme for economical power at belt, drawbar, or power take-off.

Ask us to show you this powerful John Deere Tractor.

Among all the delightful performance characteristics of the Outstanding Chevrolet—none is creating more widespread enthusiasm than its thrilling speed and flashing acceleration!

The great new six-cylinder valve-in-head engine responds to the accelerator with an eagerness that is literally amazing. Touring speeds are negotiated with such smooth, silent, effortless ease that you almost forget there's a motor under the hood. And when the throttle is opened wide—the pace is faster than the most experienced driver would care to maintain!

Back of this exceptional performance is a brilliant array of engineering advancements—typified by a high-compression, non-detonating cylinder head... semi-automatic spark control... and a heavier crankshaft, statically and dynamically balanced.

Come in and drive this car. Learn for yourself, at the wheel, that no other car can approach it in the price range of the four!

HARRISON BOY SHOT IN ATTEMPT TO ESCAPE FORT

Private Larry Anderson, 19-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Anderson of Harrison, was shot and killed Saturday morning as the result of an attempt to escape from a sentry at Fort Williams, where he was being held for trial as a deserter from Fort H. G. Wright, Long Island Sound, N. Y. He was shot through the right lung and died 45 minutes later at the post hospital. Before firing at the fleeing figure the sentry had twice warned him to halt and fired one shot in the air.

Anderson enlisted for service with the Coast Artillery some months ago and was sent to Fort Williams, where he was held for trial as a deserter. A week ago he returned to his post and was taken into custody by the sentry. He was held in the post hospital until he was taken to the post hospital, where he was held for trial as a deserter.

Saturday morning Anderson was on a working crew in the post hospital, engaged in cutting grass near the hospital. He was not far from the center gate of the post when he was shot. The sentry fired the shot which hit Anderson in the right lung and died 45 minutes later at the post hospital. Before firing at the fleeing figure the sentry had twice warned him to halt and fired one shot in the air.

Anderson refused to heed either the commands of the sentry or the post hospital. He then threw his rifle at the sentry for the second time and fired at the sentry. As the bullet found its mark, Anderson fell abruptly, staggered and fell on his back. He was taken to the post hospital, where he was held for trial as a deserter. The man's parents were notified of the death and arrangements were made for the removal of the body to the home in Harrison for burial.

Col. John W. Wright, commanding post at Fort Williams, appointed a board of inquiry, and the members held a hearing Saturday afternoon. The findings have been submitted to Col. Wright and will be forwarded to the first Corps Area headquarters at Boston.

The Anderson family, who are from Harrison, had lived in Harrison for the past 12 years and besides the parents, had several sons and daughters surviving.

It is believed that another board of inquiry will be named to investigate whether the sentry was acting within military regulations in firing upon the escaping prisoner.

Old Pottery

Old Pottery Dating Back One Hundred Years, Torn Down

The last old landmark at North Bridgton is no more. This building was on the shore of Long Lake, on the Harrison road.

This Pottery was owned and operated by Richard Kitson, better known locally as Dick. He started business there one hundred years ago.

This is how the beanpots and jugs were made: they had to make a trip to the old canal, which was about ten miles this side of Portland, making the trip about thirty miles to get the clay from which the pottery was made.

First the clay was put into a large, wooden tub, built for the purpose, the clay wet with a large amount of water, a horse was used for power, this was worked by horse power for about three hours, then put into a large box, next it was made into balls and weighed, then put into a kiln and molded then Dick Kitson would shape these with skill and swiftness by hand into the desired shape, after which they were carried by clamps into the air and sundried, unless they were to be glazed.

Next in this process of pottery making in these days if long ago they were baked in an oval brick oven, there were arches in this kiln for the burning of wood, and they had to be glazed with teachers lead, which had to be melted in big kettles, being stirred constantly, this had to be mixed with lead. The only place the right kind could be found was from the shores of Brandy Pond, which is at the outlet of Long Lake at Naples and in this kiln for the burning of wood, and they had to be glazed with teachers lead, which had to be melted in big kettles, being stirred constantly, this had to be mixed with lead.
